

THE POLYNESIAN.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1890.

When last we said, in reference to these islands, that the worst feature of their national life had been passed, we did not say so, as some imagined, because "the wish was father to the thought," but because we saw our way clear to establish the assertion by historical and material proofs. We thought that contemporary enlightened minds would have had both leisure and disposition to make those researches in the past for themselves which led us to the conclusion which we enunciated.

But facts, however, are sometimes bulky things, as well as stubborn; and those who are predisposed to doubt as much through a scanty information as through obstinacy in defending a previously expressed opinion—by them no allusion to a well known fact, no compendium even, will be received as proof. They want all the details and the figures in full to a fraction. And when you honor them and treat them to volumes of such reading as the "Patent Office Reports" or similar evidences of a nation's progress, they wistfully turn the leaves over, but lack the mental courage to pick up the proofs that lie before them; and by a singular, but often travelled, cross-road of the mind, they prefer rather to repose on their own doubt than advance to the proofs whereby that doubt may be shattered.

We cannot reasonably hope to remove the doubts of such ultra sceptics either in blue or black. They are of two kinds and generally incurable. First, those who never compare the present with the past, and whose sole argument may be thus pronounced: "The present is miserable, ergo the future must be damnable." Second, those who always compare the present with the past, and regret the "good old time" when they were the cocks of the walk, ere competition arose, and the sceptre departed from the house of Judah.

With these we can hold no discussions and offer no arguments. We simply note their existence, in order to account for their occasional cawing through the columns of the press or otherwise.

Let us then see, as briefly as it can be done here, if we were not correct when we said that "the worst had actually been passed" by this people, and that "things were mending at a rapid though necessarily uneven rate."

We will not dwell on the mental darkness and social brutality under which this people grew and increased—as the animals grow and increase—before the stranger in his "floating islands" dropped from the clouds on their astonished vision. From that moment Hawaii stepped out from its isolation and came in direct, unavoidable contact with a civilization and condition of things so utterly foreign to the habits and alien to the very nature of the people, that even its vices had nothing in common and had to be learned, though, alas! the teachers were not wanting and the pupils but too apt. From that time the little Hawaiian planet "swept through the shadow of the globe" into the opening day of our constellations, and then commenced the moulting process, the transition period, the desert probation, by which alone old things could become new, and the new ones rendered permanent and capable of progress.

Let us now follow the course of this people through the desert and we shall find that, with many deviations and occasional back tracks, yet the comparatively clear gain on its onward march is beyond the parallel of any other people, either ancient or modern; and that, if not everything that a fond partiality or a willful delusion may insist upon, yet the elements of progress are multiplying everywhere and hope grows stronger as the years roll on.

The first great political step which this nation took after the advent of Cook was the unification of all the islands in the group under one chief and one government. While the idea of this grand act was almost imperceptibly developed from the growing intercourse with the foreigner, and strengthened by the facilities and means which his presence afforded, it in its turn became one of the most powerful means to render civilization accessible everywhere, uniform in its operation, milder in its conflicts and speedier as well as more certain in its results.

Where this people would have been, from a social and political point of view, without that consolidation of power and extinction of separate interests, can easily be conceived if we look at its kindred races in other directions of the Pacific, who are yet either spelling out their lessons unconscious of their import, or breaking their teeth in impotent rage over the file of civilization, which, through their own want of foresight and unity of efforts, has fallen into the hands of the stranger. Where are the Marquesas, the Society, the Samoans, the Fiji Islands, New Zealand and others? They are gone, or going; for under the circumstances in which those fragments of a race are now placed, there can be no life as a people, no civilization as a development of that life, without national independence and national unity.

The next great political step was the abolition of the tabus and the introduction of letters. As the unification of the islands had physically liberated the people from the grinding tyranny and feuds of a host of petty oppressors, so the repeal of the tabus liberated the national mind from the yoke of one of the most elaborate and revolting forms of heathenism on record. It broke the shackles and opened the door of the soul's prison house, and however well or unworthily that mental liberty may have been employed, or however deep and unseemly sores may still remain to attest the abject slavery of a former condition, yet the acquisition of the power and the acknowledgement of their right to think freely and raise their eyes to heaven, not only without fear, but even in confidence, if they so choose, was an immense progress through the desert; and to those who had hitherto lived an aggregate life without that individuality of thought, that consciousness of their own blindness, which attest the quickening into mental and moral life of a people—to them the repeal was a revolution so thoroughly upsetting the ancient faith and loosening the social modes of thought that thenceforward a relapse became impossible.

Close upon the heels of this repeal of the tabus came the introduction of letters and the teaching of a new faith. We will speak of the two and their influences upon the progress of the people separately.

By the introduction of letters—the ability to communicate with each other, to be made conversant with all the teeming experience of the past, to see themselves as others see them, to record their deeds and aspirations on the written, undying pages of history, instead of the treacherous memory of tradition, to hold in their own hands the key to knowledge and power, to good and evil, the ability to fructify the thoughts which the repeal of the tabus had released from thralldom—by this not only were the political union and the mental liberty of the people secured, but the door to further progress thrown wide open, and their passage became only limited by the measure of their own ability and the disposition of their guides. And any it never be forgotten that too much praise cannot be awarded to those men and women who brought those letters and that knowledge in the very nick of time, as it were, when the native mind stood trembling and awestruck at its own temerity and nakedness.

Whether this people has made all the use and the best use of the advantages thus opportunely and thus freely offered, and whether the teachers adopted the best method to speed and effect that knowledge which, when once acquired, would have been, and permanently so, useful in all the relations of the social and political life of the people, are questions of which current events are affording a daily solution—are questions which may on other occasions afford arguments to prove the vacillations and the retrogressions on the desert path; but it is enough for our purpose that letters came in any form and were embraced.

Along with the letters came the teaching of a new faith. The want of the first was certainly more appreciated than the want of the latter. To the eager, imitative, plastic mind of the native letters and the acquisition of knowledge were a novelty and had charms peculiar to themselves, and were therefore embraced with an avidity which the insufficiency and often curious nature of the supply have not diminished; while the want of a new faith was hardly felt by a people which, notwithstanding the repeal of the tabus and the destruction of the idols by the chiefs, clung so firmly to its old superstitions in private life. The immediate consequence, however, here, as well as in Britain, Gaul, Germany and other places, where antagonistic faiths and social conditions have come in collisions, was a compromise, a sort of mental reservation between the old and new faiths. The manner may have differed a little, but the spirit is similar. As the old faith was publicly discarded by beat of drum and by authority of the chiefs, so in the same manner was the new faith introduced. The despotism of those days permitted no public difference of opinion in matters of religion; but though it could command a whole people to bend their knees before the new God of whom they never had heard before, yet their hearts were as passive in the church as in the Heiau, and had they not been convinced by impunity of the impotence of their old gods, there was no moral reason existing why they should prefer Jehovah to Kaili and Kailiphoah.

With all these drawbacks, however, it is in the nature of truth to make room for itself wherever it has been uttered; and if we acknowledge that, beyond the outward semblance, the country is not yet christianised, according to the sense of the word when speaking of the United States, Great Britain, France or Germany, yet there is nothing in that admission to undervalue the labors of those who have striven to sow the seeds of a truer faith and a purer practice among this people—nor is there anything from which to infer that superstitions, touching so close upon the ancient regime, would not here, as in those other countries, gradually give way before the incessant rays of light and truth.

We know that we are treading on delicate ground, and that there are those who cannot bear the least allusion to, nor criticism of, the religious aspect of the Hawaiian people, and invariably construe our remarks as insulting to religion in general and attacking themselves personally. We regret the antagonism, and can conceive of the prejudices which lie at the bottom of it; but, with the explanations above offered, we hope that we may not again be misunderstood when we say that, however highly we prize the introduction of letters and knowledge, and in behalf of this people would gratefully remember the self-devotion of their teachers, yet, while speaking of the influences which have brought this people forward through the desert, through their transition period, we cannot attribute to the introduction of the new faith, as a moral element and separated from its political adjuncts, any more than a secondary influence upon the permanency of national life, the purification of national character and the loftier range of national development. Whoever claims more for it cannot fail to be controverted by historical facts in the past, by similar manifestations in the present.

We will pursue this subject hereafter. As we said before, "facts are sometimes bulky things as well as stubborn."

Steam Navigation.

We understand that the Hawaiian Steam Navigation Company tend to-day by the "Yankee" for boiler plate and other materials for the construction of boilers, engine and propeller for one of our coasting schooners, the first of three which they propose to run in conjunction with the Kilauea, thus enabling them to give every Island and every port of any importance the full benefit of steam navigation, whilst at the same time these propellers will entirely remove the fears of some that when the schooners are driven off we shall be without the means of inter-island communication if any accident happened to the Kilauea. It will have the effect also of making the Steam Company's stock a perfectly safe investment, as in case of accident to the Kilauea these small propellers must realise enormous profits.

The Whaling Fleet.

The whalers continue to arrive. Since last week 11 have arrived at the various ports of the islands, making 66 in all, bringing 998 blb. sperm, 33,167 blb. whale and 422,800 lbs. of bone, with the following average—38 vessels from Arctic, Kodiak and Bristol Bay, with 458 blb. sperm, 17,655 blb. whale and 260,800 lbs. bone; average to each vessel, 476 2-3 blb.; 28 vessels from the Oohotsk Sea, with 540 blb. sperm, 16,512 blb. whale and 162,000 lbs. bone; average to each vessel, 473 1-3 blb. The general average of all the vessels arrived up to yesterday is 517 2-3 blb.

H. R. H. Prince Lot Kamehameha at Victoria.
By the arrival of the barkentine Jeany Ford, Capt. Moore, in nineteen days from Puget Sound, and the courtesy of M. C. Monarrat, Esq., who came passenger from Vancouver's Island, we have received very interesting intelligence from H. R. H. Prince Kamehameha and suite, who left here on the 25th of August last, in the yacht Emma Rooke, in the hope of improving his health by a sea voyage and the change of climate. The Emma Rooke arrived on the 18th ult. at Victoria, in twenty days from here. Of the reception of the Prince we will let the Victoria journals speak. The Colonist says:

ARRIVAL OF PRINCE KAMEHAMEHA AND SUITE.—Yesterday evening one of the most beautiful little yachts ever beheld sailed into our harbor, and anchored off Laurel Point. She proved to be the Emma Rooke, 19 days from Honolulu, and her arrival created some little excitement, as soon as it became known that Prince Lot Kamehameha, of the Sandwich Islands, and suite, were on board. The Hawaiian Consul, Henry B. Rooker, Esq., immediately boarded the vessel, and brought the royal party ashore. The distinguished visitors are as follows: H. R. H. Prince Lot Kamehameha, brother to the King; Hon. David Kalakaua; Hon. Levi Halealea; Members of the House of Nobles and the King's Privy Council; and Joseph C. Spalding, A.M., deputed to the Prince and Consul of Peru. The Prince has taken the trip by the advice of physicians, and his intention is to remain here a short time; and should his health improve, probably visit California. We bespeak a fitting reception.

A few days after we read again:

PRINCE KAMEHAMEHA AND SUITE.—The Prince and suite are quartered at the French Hotel. Owing to the delicate state of the Prince's health he has not been much in public. Yesterday, however, accompanied by his suite, he paid a visit to Beacon Hill and the environs of the town. Although laboring under indisposition, and necessarily somewhat secluded, the Prince has received many calls from our prominent citizens. Yesterday, the Hon. Mr. Finlayson, Administrator of the Government, W. A. G. Young, Esq., Provincial Secretary, Dr. Helme, Speaker of the Assembly, Captain Spencer, of H. M. S. Torpedo, and a number of lesser notabilities, paid a formal visit to the Prince, to welcome him to the country, and were very graciously received. We trust our citizens will not be backward in showing that degree of courtesy to those distinguished strangers which their position warrants. Every year will increase the commercial intercourse between the colony and the Hawaiian kingdom; and no means should be allowed to slip by which we may cultivate friendly relations with a people whose Government is patterned after ours, and whose prosperity cannot but enhance our own.

By private correspondence, after noticing the passage over, we are informed that—

Upon the arrival of the Prince, Governor Douglas being absent, Mr. J. C. Spalding, A.M., deputed to the Prince and Consul of Peru, called upon him, as did also Capt. Spencer, of H. M. S. Torpedo, His Lordship the Bishop of Columbia, the Speaker and other members of the House of Representatives. On the 24th, H. R. H. rode over to Esquimalt and visited H. M. S. Torpedo, where he was received in the most courteous manner, with many compliments and royal salutes on arrival and parting, and with a superb collation on board. On returning, H. R. H. called upon the family of Governor Douglas. Yesterday, Sunday, divine service was held on board of the Emma Rooke, the Rev. Mr. Kaulehele officiating, some twenty Hawaiian gentlemen, and a number of English and Scotch gentlemen, were present. In Victoria attending, to whom the Prince made a short address, and with a superb collation on board. On returning, H. R. H. called upon the family of Governor Douglas.
